

Tabouk wood console and cabinets by Studio Becker of Germany.

Ingo Maurer-inspired chandelier by the owner and her brother.

So Cool It's Hot

Pam and Paul Southern turned gray into a high-octane statement in the dining corner of their new house in Urban Reserve, the all-modern, green North Dallas neighborhood that's beginning to fill in, with 10 homes completed and four under way. Architect Brent Brown designed the house, and multi-talented Pam (artist, sculptress and retired decorator) spearheaded the interior design. The earthy square oak table and translucent chairs from Cantoni mix substance and air upon a concrete-resembling tile floor. All this gray, though, is anything but cold. Call it smokin' design. urbanreserve.net.

MIX IT UP!

Dallas' hottest design minds craft a new rule book on all that's divine to combine

By Carla Jordan, Hanne K. Klein, Paige Phelps, Rebecca Sherman and Rachel Watkins

Edited by Connie Dufner

Photography by Justin Clemons

Forget everything you've heard about dueling décor camps. Today, it's all about melding hi and low, trad and mod, and blue-chip and boho injust-so combos. Ready to take design on a blender-bending ride? Matching fabric swatches need not apply!